

Alice McCotter. Alice works with coachees, managers and community teams to focus on positive, satisfying outcomes in the workplace, at home and in the community. Her thirty-one year tenure with a Fortune 100 company has equipped her to help individuals, teams and organizations achieve business transitions, resolve conflict, improve operations and collaborate at all levels.

As a coach, she helps people recognize the choices they are making. Together, they uncover alternatives that can positively influence their world.

Originally from Michigan, Alice is a former manager and director at Kellogg Company, where she served for more than three decades in global financial processes, technology integration and customer relations. She currently serves as board treasurer for S.A.F.E. Place (a local non-profit domestic violence shelter).

She believes in honesty and authenticity as keys to resolve conflicts more easily and to find better solutions. Alice also embraces the power of choice with the personal goal to leave relationships better than she found them. Her favorite quote is from her mother who used to say, "If you haven't got something good to say, don't say anything!"

Alice is a Certified Intrinsic Coach and holds a bachelor's degree in business administration from Siena Heights University. Alice joined Humanergy in 2008. In her spare time, she enjoys reading, working in her yard, good food and playing with her grandchildren.
